A very excited Chris told The Islander about the shoot he had done for M/Y Kenshō. We were equally excited when he showed us the full gallery of the project. Our readers are used to seeing pictures of yachts, but to us, this aerial shot was something else! From the sky, Chris accentuated the vast, flush deck spaces and the striking curves of the superstructure. But what gives Chris's talent away is the angle of the light he caught. How it plays with the Kenshō Metallic Paint - designed especially for this yacht- the shadows of the guardrail on the teak deck, and of course the shimmering on the water.

Kenshō was designed by Azure Yacht Design and delivered this year from the Admiral Yachts shipyard. She is 75,18m long, hosts 12 guests in 8 cabins, and 23 crew that keep her operational.

If you're in Bermuda this winter, you'll know Kenshō when you see her. We liked how her tenders have the same unique colour which was based on a Ford Mustang from the 60's. To be honest, anything based on a Mustang from the 60's will always be ubercool! 1
